The George Lowe House is located on the north side of U.S. 50 at the intersection of White-Lowe Road, northwest of Salisbury, Maryland. It is a two story plus attic frame house with three bays, two central chimneys and a one story shed roofed porch across the front (south) elevation. The porch is partially enclosed on the western end. The gable roof is parallel to U.S. 50 and is covered in modern composition material. The fenestration is 2/2 in the main block; that in the small porch enclosure is ribboned in single panes except for a louvred 1/1 window at the front side. The exterior of the entire house is covered in modern asbestos siding. The foundation is covered in permastone. A dilapidated frame outbuilding to the left rear of the house has a shingle roof and the entire exterior covering has been removed, revealing the frame construction and interior laths.

There are no major trees or shrubs on the site.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This house represents the settlement pattern of farms in the 19th century along the main road from Cambridge to Salisbury (U.S. 50). Its greatly altered exterior belies its probable pre-1877 construction date.
